in Copenhagen
Wonderful in White

Designed by Norm Architects, the rustic Fisherman's House in the lovely Copenhagen, Denmark is adorned in white from the floors, walls and ceilings in the in order to connect them visually regardless of their differences and to reflect the light and give the feel of a larger space. The first thing the designers did was to knock down all the walls leaving the chimney and transforming the lower level into one large room. New walls were installed around the old chimney partly hiding the work area in the kitchen and creating a connection between the kitchen and the other living areas. An old wooden beam over the kitchen with a long continuous line of small light bulbs that provide the ideal working light and enhance visually the space making seem larger.

As some parts of the house, the cellar was kept its old self and rustic looking like an archaeological site at night. Light emerging from the cellar also works as a corner lamp in the floor. Wonderful in white, this old rustic structure has come as a beautiful and soft home. ●
